During the 19th century, New York became the biggest city in America. The illustration shows New York City at the end of the 19th century. In 1890 it had a population of around 1.5 million. The Brooklyn Bridge across the East River opened in 1883. With a total length of 1,825 metres, at the time it was the longest suspension bridge in the world. At the end of the 19th century, New York still didn't have any skyscrapers. The first skyscraper, the Flatiron Building, opened in 1902. It had 20 floors. New York City's first underground line, called the IRT, opened in 1904.

1 How many people lived in New York City in 1890?

2 How long is the Brooklyn Bridge?

3 When did the first skyscraper in New York City open?

4 How many floors did the Flatiron Building have?
